

Sunday, January 14, 1917.—Villalobar here to call this afternoon, very amusing with his accounts of his voyage. He disgusted with response of the Allies, like every one here of any intelligence. He says Van Vollenhoven came to him and apologized the other day, willing to make up their quarrel.

Kellogg has spent the whole day with us—long, quiet, congenial talks.

I can't get over the Allies' note. Jack Johnson ¹ must have written it—and he has put the Allies in the German trap.
