

February 21, 1917.—Gregory in. Has full assurances from Germany, but places little reliance on them. Will not send his men back to the north of France anyway. Nothing to be done until the route for the ships is agreed upon. Germany and England both trying to throw on the other the blame for the failure of the relief. It looks as if an impasse had been reached, and that the relief would fail.